

ANTARCTIC HERITAGE TRUST

Discovery. Adventure. Endurance.

The 'heroic age' of exploration at the turn of the twentieth century saw a number of expeditions and men risking their lives to conquer the last great land frontier on earth—Antarctica. As one of the last great races of discovery this era of exploration typified endurance, leadership, courage, passion, sacrifice and tragedy.

These expeditions, led by famous explorers including Shackleton, Scott and Amundsen, built substantial huts as bases for epic sledging journeys. Some of these huts still stand today – the last testament to a remarkable age.

Antarctica remains the only continent on Earth where human's first dwellings still stand. The sites and the relics associated with these expeditions are suffering the ravages of time and the harsh climate—they are in urgent need of attention. The Antarctic Heritage Trust, a New Zealand charity, exists to save these fascinating sites in the Ross Sea region of Antarctica for future generations.

You can help. Our members, Antarctic Explorers, are committed to conserving the legacy of discovery, adventure and endurance. By joining, your support will help the Trust in a major capital-raising project to conserve these sites and ensure this fascinating legacy and chapter in human history is not lost to the world.
